Concerning Copyright and Other Matters

Some of the persons and locations in the following story are loosely based on persons and locations described in Tolkien's works. This is for the purpose of atmosphere only and is not intended as a reinterpretation of Tolkien's works.

This story is essentially neo-Sindarin, however, the grammatical structure, syntax and vocabulary is mostly based on Thorsten Renk's Pedin Edhellen, version 2.0, with some additional borrowing from David Salo's Sindarin found in the Lord of the Rings movie. Any divergence from this is based on my own interpretation of the language. Words derived from Quenya as well as reconstructed words from Sindarin not found in the usual wordlists are so noted in a Glossary appended to the end of each chapter.

For those who find neo-Sindarin untenable, may I respectfully suggest you treat the language of the text as dialectical, since it is well attested that Sindarin had different dialects spoken in Beleriand and it is not inconceivable that there were dialectical differences in later ages as well.

This story was originally written for the author's personal amusement as an attempt by the author to better understand the Sindarin language in all its beauty and complexity. It is hoped that the reader will enjoy the story for its own sake, as well.

The events of this story take place approximately twelve years before Bilbo Baggin's famous (or infamous) Birthday Party.

I would like to thank Thorsten Renk for his kind assistance in correcting my Sindarin and Evenstar for her patience.
